Relevant

The best part about earning your graduate degree at UNG is being able to apply what you learn right away! You will benefit from assignments tailored to fit your unique work challenges, goals and interests to build on the foundation of your previous experiences. Plus, you will have ample resume-building experiences and research opportunities, such as working on case studies, community engagement projects and industry collaboration.

It's a well-established fact that your lifetime earning potential increases at every level of education. According to the U.S. Bureau of Labor Statistics, workers' earnings increase as educational attainment rises, and more education means less unemployment. A graduate degree from UNG can be a valuable asset in helping you achieve your career goals.

“I’ve already begun to reap the benefits of the MBA. One year into the program, I landed a new role at a different company because the program gave me the skills to be a better leader.”

*– Andrew
Master of Business Administration, '20*
